

www.nzla.org.nz

4pm Thursday
19th October

$10 NZLA members
$20 non-members

How teachers who read create readers

An NZLA Webinar

Reading for pleasure is associated with academic achievement and social and emotional benefits. International research identifies the impact of teachers who are themselves readers and bring their values, beliefs, and practices as readers into the classroom in building ākongā enjoyment of reading. But how do they do it?

Join us to hear Sue McDowall share the findings of a small research study carried out by NZCER for the National Library of New Zealand exploring possible connections between the personal reading practices of a small sample of teachers and leaders known as passionate readers and their approaches to reading in their classrooms and schools.

LINK TO REGISTER

<https://tinyurl.com/nzla-read>

Sue McDowall

Sue is a Kairangahau Matua (Senior Researcher) at NZCER. She has eight years of experience as a primary school teacher and over 20 in literacy-related research, evaluation, resource development, and assessment. Sue has been a member of the English and Literacy/Communication writing groups and the Common Practice Model Contributors group for the curriculum refresh.